I have a free time, so what should i do with my work? A: I think you may want to look at ThreeJS. ThreeJS works for both platforms (in addition to several others, such as html5 canvas/javascript) If you want to use the Canvas 3D API (which is based on the WebGL API) on the iOS and Android, you should probably use some kind of WebView. There's a very good tutorial here. The basic steps for this are: Create a page with a WEBVIEW component. Attach an event handler to the load event of the WEBVIEW component. Inside the load event, create a new THREE.Scene() with a VIEWCONTROLLER, set the DOM to the VIEWCONTROLLER and then Add DOM-CHILD'S to the VIEWCONTROLLER. This will give you the DOM element to render to and access the API that you would use normally from the threejs library. For example, you might have a page that looks like this window.onload = init();

function init() { var renderer, scene, camera, controls, geometry, material, mesh;

Our single player is still in heavy development, as we are focusing on patches and content for the next few weeks. We promise, though, that our developers will continue to contribute additional updates to the game for you all! Soundtrack Summary: ♪ The very adventure of life ♪ ∞ arranged by Springloaded + Beautiful | Transcribed & Mixed by Augusto | + Become a part of the Arclands universe ♪ Your adventure in the Arclands is over now. But you still have new things to experience... because we have invited you in the park of Zozo because you want to play at... Let's build a zoo ♪ The park of Zozo has been built by our group of gamers over the last few weeks. It is a "huge" multi-level nature park that is located somewhere in the heart of the Arclands. This natural environment can be changed by you just with a simple click of the mouse. To create a new scene, you have to enter a name for the scene and the exact location in the nature park. It is not only for fun. In the game, you can build something... you can bring animals into the park or even into the houses inside the nature park. These new elements and scenarios will be available for you to find in the game. It will be fun to play and create new content. We want you to be as creative as possible. All new elements are created and approved by the Arclands Co-op team before they are added into the game. So, we have the park of Zozo ready for you, open for you... but we want you to be part of it. You can register for this game (free) for a unique username or email at our website. You will then receive all kind of bonus content. In case you like to support us and use the game, you will receive game progress and points. (Please visit the store section in game to do so.) Closing Words: Do you like what we are doing? What would you like to see in the future? We would love to hear from you! As you guys already know, we are working hard on the Arclands for the new year. There are a lot of new elements to tell about. Maybe you already know the weather effect we are working on. In this devblog, we will tell you something about the single player. But it's also important as he'd only heard Grandmother once the last time. 'It's your grandfather's earring... one of Grandfather's many beloved earrings.' 'What happened? Has my grandfather _died_?' 'I wish he had. But no. His health is not all it should be. He has a touch of arthritis in his bones. A touch, a mere touch. Doctor's wool worked him one bad day in his sleep and he thought he was finished. Your grandfather is... how can I say? He is, uh, living for his children. He meant for you to have his earring, to remember him by.' 'Uh-huh, whatever,' Kerik said. He wanted Grandfather dead. But as he began to pull on Grandfather's finger, Auntie Julek shouted, 'Kerik! Kiki!' and the boy, who had been arguing with the tailor, said, 'Oh,' and went scurrying back into the bowels of the house. Grandfather had him now! The boy couldn't argue with the old man's face. The old man was doing his grandfather's dance again. On the edge of dancing, Grandfather's mouth smiled, as though pulled back from a smile would snap his face. The grey-green veins all dancing in his temples throbbed livid. The look that those eyes, the smallest, most unblinking of his eyes, shot Grandmother's youngest child caused the tailor to hand Kerik his shawl and wish him a happy day. Everyone remembered the last dance of Grandfather's life. The old man dropped his head and closed his eyes. In fact, he did his usual and took off his shoes and shoes socks. He wouldn't put on the pair of drawers that made him 'look' like a man of some years—his tallies and his getain. He didn't want to wear his clothes that fitted him. He wanted to put on his dance clothes, the clothes he'd had when he took care of his own cows. He began to dance again. Everyone put down their drinks and stood. Only Uncle Milosh didn't stand. Uncle Milosh was a plump man with a soft voice. He sat at the card table with no tablecloth, a fond remembrance of his mother. She had been gracious and soft-spoken. Uncle Milosh's card table was the size of an entire tavern table.

What's new:
